

Immortality & Accidents

Imagine a future world where medical science has stopped or even reversed the aging process, eliminated cellular malfunction and organ failure, and conquered all infectious disease. Imagine further that there is no more injustice, crime, and war.

- Would humans be immortal?
- What about accidents?
- Given sufficient time, would a life-ending accident not be inevitable?
- Because such an accident would take away nothing less than a never-ending life, would a person in this world live in daily fear?

Would mortality be preferable in such a world?
